

ALL MORGAN ART IN THE MUSEUMS SUBJECT TO TAX

Two Years of Grace After Death of Financier Have Expired.

With the expiration yesterday of the two years' grace given the president, J. P. Morgan to decide whether to would sell his father's rare art collection and library or present them to some museum, State officials declared today they would begin immediately to appraise all the collection for the purpose of collecting inheritance tax.

At the same time it was reported today that Mr. Morgan, who is now in London, has decided to sell all the art collection, but to retain his wonderful library, now housed in his private library at No. 22 East Thirty-sixth street.

There are 25,000 rare books and manuscripts in the building. There has never been any valuation placed upon them, though the building itself has been appraised at $25,750. The library itself is said to be one of the most complete and costly in existence.

No definite announcement has been made regarding Mr. Morgan's intentions regarding the art works in the Metropolitan Museum, but it is declared he will dispose of the entire collection to private firms.

Much of the estate has been appraised, but no official attention has yet been given to any of the Morgan treasures loaned to the Metropolitan Museum of Art except the Chinese porcelains and the Pragergold paintings, which have been sold and withdrawn. The remainder has now been subject to tax regardless of the present J. P. Morgan's disposition of it by gift or otherwise.

"We have had no intimation from Mr. Morgan or his attorneys of his intention to present the museum with the collection or any part of it," Deputy State Comptroller William Boardman said today. "The collection is now subject to the inheritaxes tax no matter what he may decide to do with it.

"A special act might remove the tax, were the collection to pass over to the museum or other institution, but our official duty is clear and we shall proceed as soon as possible to appraise the museum collection. I do not know how long the work will take, but I judge it cannot be finished prior to Mr. Morgan's return to this country from England.

"The estate has already paid $1,000,000 on account of the tax. In anticipation that the museum loan might be given to the city, State, the Metropolitan Museum, or otherwise pass from private possession for public enjoyment, a special act was passed exempting from tax whatever might be included within such gift within two years after the death of the elder Morgan.

"I believe that if the loan should now be converted into a gift the Comptroller would approve a bill to provide for its assumption in any event, this office must now go on with the appraisal.

Flowers for Easter

Among the show places of New York are the Bloomingdale Greenhouses on the roof. You will find in this veritable "Hanging Garden of Babylon" thousands of plants and flowers, many of them from the tropics. A walk on the cinder path beneath the tall palms is exceedingly interesting. It is like a scene in fairyland.

While at Bloomingdale's, don't fail to visit the flower gardens in the Lexington Avenue Arcade and also on the main floor. Here are displayed plants suitable for Easter. You'll find the prices, just before Easter, ridiculously low. Orders may be placed NOW for all kinds of fresh cut flowers to be delivered by special messenger on Easter morning.
